Utah Corrections Director to Transition to Utah Board of Pardons and Parole Director

(SALT LAKE CITY) –After nearly 14 years of dedicated service with the Utah Department of Corrections (UDC), Executive Director Mike Haddon will be transitioning to work as the executive director for the Utah Board of Pardons and Parole.

“Mike is truly an exceptional leader. He has served the state of Utah well in his role at the Department of Corrections, and I have no doubt that he will continue to render extraordinary service in this new role,” said Gov. Gary Herbert. The State is lucky to have him.”

Haddon was named executive director in August 2018. Before that, he twice served as interim executive director, as well as deputy director for UDC.

Since his appointment, Mike has continued focus on the development of the new prison that will be West of the Salt Lake Airport. He has also worked with his leadership team to help individuals successfully exit the justice system while also focusing on staff development and needs. Most recently, UDC has been fully engaged in work to prevent and contain COVID-19 within the prison system, and Utah was one of the last states nationally to experience an outbreak of the virus.

“It has truly been a humbling experience to work alongside the men and women who have dedicated their careers to public service – specifically serving those who are too often overlooked by society,” said Haddon. “These individuals certainly merit public support and public admiration. The years that I have spent with the Utah Corrections team are years I will treasure forever. Though not being asked to step down, the timing of this change feels natural as Utah transitions to a newly elected Governor.”

Haddon was appointed Deputy Director of Administrative Services, Utah Correctional Industries and the Clinical Services Bureau for the Utah Department of Corrections in January 2007 and again under the direction of former Executive Director Rollin Cook in 2013. In addition to supervising department functions such as finance, research, records, information technology and policy, Haddon has served as the agency’s legislative liaison.

Prior to his service with Corrections, Haddon served as director of research for the Utah Commission on Criminal and Juvenile Justice and the Utah Sentencing Commission. He earned his undergraduate degree from Boise State University and Master of Public Administration, with an emphasis on criminal justice administration, from the University of Utah.

Haddon’s departure will be effective Dec. 12. The governor will appoint an interim director in the near future.
